

EOP NEWSFLASH

'Lights, camera, action!!'

Date: October 2009

Our baby elephants recently took the limelight, when a UK film crew from the SKY channel visited the Elephant Orphanage Project. The filming is part of a new series, following Luke Gamble, an English vet who is supporting wildlife charities all over the world with free veterinary support and equipment. The team had been filming a number of charities in Zambia and chose Kafue National Park and the EOP as the grand finale to their trip.

The star of the show was obviously our newest baby elephant Tafika, who was not in the slightest bit camera shy and took great delight in using his trunk to try to pull off the microphone from the camera.

As well as giving our team some great advice from other elephant experiences that they have encountered, they also left a good supply of veterinary medical supplies which will be of great use in case of an emergency.

The series is planned to be broadcast in the UK mid next year, but you can visit Luke Gamble's blog and read about his adventures in Zambia on: www.lukegamble.com. If the series is broadcast in Zambia, we will let you all know the details.
